Though he hoped to plot a path out of chaos, Macron's errors prolong a political crisis in France

Despite having made several appearances during the Olympic Games, Emmanuel Macron retreated to his residence in the south of France during the Games. Since then, having called for a political truce while Paris hosted a spectacular sporting competition, the president hoped to chart a path to exit the crisis created by his decision to call an early election in the middle of summer.

Nothing happened. The Olympic athletes have long since departed, and the traditional rentrée of September is approaching. But no new government has taken shape - the longest hiatus since immediately after the second world war - and bitterness reigns. This week, Mr. Macron used his presidential power to disqualify any candidate for prime minister proposed by the New Popular Front (NFP), the left-wing alliance that narrowly won the July election.

This was the last error in a tragicomic sequence of mistakes. No political formation has a majority in the Assembly, and a minority government from the NFP would have a difficult time surviving for long. But that would be a more democratically clean result. Instead, it seems the president hopes to build a complacent coalition leaning to the right; one that, above all, will leave his unpopular reforms intact.

This will not be an easy task. Mr. Macron's presidency is now gravely compromised. Humiliated by Marine Le Pen in the European elections of June, he hoped to restore his authority by surprising the republicans by reuniting a "front" to check the extreme right. This strategy of rehabilitation failed through the unexpected success of the left. For ambitious conservative politicians, the prospect of linking their fortunes to a lame duck still proves tempting.

But it is not all about the president and his desires, or at least it should not be. With a combination of tactical subtlety, audacity and technocratic brilliance, Mr. Macron divided and governed French politics since 2017. But, indulging his characteristic desire to remain completely in control of events, even after losing, he is fighting against the interests of the country he leads.

The loss of confidence in politics contributed to the rise of the extreme right in France and across Europe, just as it did in France. In the face of this scenario, refusing to give the winners of the election at least a chance of forging a consensus is imprudent and myopic. Mr. Macron justified his posture by equating the far right with the France Unbowed party of Jean-Luc Mélenchon (LFI) and the Rassemblement National of Marine Le Pen. But, after repeatedly depending on a broad republican front, including the LFI, to keep Ms Le Pen out of power, this is clearly dishonest.

In the meantime, France is in a state of flux. Ms Le Pen - whose eyes have always been on the 2027 presidential election - can afford to wait while the conventional political process unfolds. The prospect of government remains remote. The interim prime minister of Macron, Gabriel Attal, is currently working on a provisional budget for autumn, one he admits could be overturned by his successor. His hubris, once again, led the president to this situation. A new humility in French politics will be necessary to get France out of this.
